banking sector should not be brought under CAG audit because CAG audit was primarily rule bound and banking activity necessarily involved as a measure of discretion. There is also no weigh in the argument that the nationalised banks and financial institutions would be discriminated against vis-a-vis the foreign banks, since the latter would be outside the purview of CAG audit. This Committee, therefore, recommends that the audit of the nationalised banks and other financial institutions which are Government owned or Government controlled should be brought under the control of C&AG who shoould select and appoint Statutoty Auditors and carry out a supplementary audit through its own officers just as is done in the case of Government companies and other public sector undertakings. Bringing the banks under the CAG audit would ensure that a vital component of the economy is not left outside the purview of CAG's jurisdiction. This would also go a long way in restoring public confidence and credibility of the banks and other financial institution".

(c) The matter is still under examination of the Government in consultation with Reserve Bank of India.
